Medical Toxicology - Emergency Medicine Physician

Allegheny Health Network (AHN) Toxicology is seeking a qualified candidate for a medical toxicology – emergency medicine employment opportunity. We invite qualified physician candidates to apply to join the Division of Medical Toxicology under the Department of Emergency Medicine. Applicants should be fellowship-trained and board-certified/board-eligible in medical toxicology.

Allegheny General Hospital

Our established medical toxicology service is based out of Allegheny General Hospital, a nationally recognized, quaternary care center located in Pittsburgh, PA. We manage a bedside consultation service as well as growing telehealth services at other network hospitals. AHN currently employs two medical toxicologists, and we look forward to growing our service with the addition of a third partner.

AHN Toxicology operates year-round resident and medical student rotations with the opportunity for teaching and contribution to medical education. AHN fosters an environment of lifelong education and provides ample opportunity for professional growth. Academic appointment, scholarly activity, and research involvement are readily accessible for qualified applicants.

Community Information

Pittsburgh has been designated many times as one of the country's most livable cities. Originally a major industrial center, Pittsburgh has made the successful transition to an economy that is largely based on healthcare, education, technology, and financial services. Pittsburgh hosts world-class education including universities like Pitt and Carnegie Mellon, plus nationally regarding public and private schools. The residential options are vast and offer easy commuting from urban, suburban and rural amenities. The city and the region feature dozens of parks and other outdoor recreational attractions including the riverfront and mountains. Pittsburghers are dedicated to their sports teams, including its major-league clubs — the Steelers, Penguins and Pirates. A beautiful downtown Cultural District is home to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, Pittsburgh Ballet Theater, and Civic Light Opera and numerous theaters and galleries. Other attractions include the Carnegie Museums of Art and Natural History, Andy Warhol Museum, and Carnegie Science Center. Add in the many music festivals held annually, numerous dance companies performing around the area, and art galleries galore. Pittsburgh can satisfy just about any taste in the arts.
